

THE HOLOCAUST COUNCIL OF METROWEST

SURVIVORS SPEAK

Survivors Speak is a program originally developed by the Holocaust Council of MetroWest for The Morris Museum as part of their outreach to schools.

The program consists of two speakers who are eyewitnesses to the Holocaust (survivors, liberators, POWs) and a moderator. The speakers are chosen for the diversity of their experiences during the Holocaust, as the intent is to make listeners aware that the Holocaust was not only Auschwitz but a vast array of experiences. The moderator introduces the speakers, provides historical context, keeps the speakers to their allotted times, and moderates the Question and Answer session that follows the talks.

Survivors Speak works well in even very large auditoriums. Most often, audiences are middle and high school students, but this program is effective for all age groups. The program is an hour and a half in length, but we suggest you allow extra time, as many students want to meet, shake hands with the survivors, and even get their autographs.

Our requirements are a table, at least one microphone (three are preferable), and some water for the speakers. We provide "Teachers Kits" for educators, as well as copies of the booklet, "A Brief Introduction to the Holocaust."
